

Indigenous Peoples Funding and Resource Guide

Second Edition

Compiled by International Funders for Indigenous Peoples and First Peoples Worldwide

Foreword from the President

Dear Friends,

We are excited to provide Native/Indigenous Peoples with the Indigenous Peoples Funding and Resource Guide and hope it will become instrumental in building capacity of Indigenous communities as they effectively increase their participation as successful international grant-seekers.

I had envisioned the Indigenous Peoples Funding and Resource Guide with Indigenous development projects in mind, as there is a great and urgent need for financial resources to improve traditional communities. I am delighted that this guide is now in its second edition and will continue to be updated as international Indigenous funding increases. The two projects of First Nations Development Institute (FNDI) that collaborated to produce the guide, International Funders for Indigenous Peoples (IFIP) and First Peoples Worldwide (FPW), are committed to produce a more complete and concise guide every two years, this guide will get better and better.

For many funders, Indigenous Peoples are exotic and their projects far removed from their typical grantee portfolios. Yet, Indigenous Peoples are the largest minority in the world with more than 300 million people in over 90 different countries. In every case, Indigenous populations are the most impoverished and underrepresented group within their respective country. The fact that much of their traditional territories may contain vast natural resources and the advent of oil or gas exploration does little but bring large-scale disruption to once pristine environments and their traditional way of life.

Already marginalized, Indigenous Peoples are seldom supported by the national governments who generally view the natural resources within Indigenous lands as easy targets for State revenue. Major concessions are consistently brokered between national governments and global corporations that witnesses hundreds of millions of dollars in resources and revenues change hands with little, if any, funds or benefits ever reaching Indigenous communities. In fact, while international law requires all such extractive industry activities be conducted in accordance with formal consultation with Indigenous communities, it seldom ever happens. This is clearly in violation of their international human rights, but also points to great potential for donors to have impact.

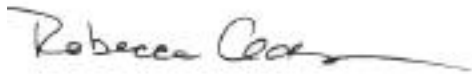

One key area is in the field of conservation. Funding Indigenous Peoples to protect and steward their lands is a strategic and effective means for placing large tracts of biodiverse territories under "Indian reserve" status similar legally to a protect area status.

Additionally the unique legal status afforded Indigenous Peoples can often "tip" the balance of power so that huge corporate interests with government support can be almost impossible to stop. However raising Indigenous rights and engaging Indigenous communities can lead from improving corporate behavior to stopping it completely when the environment and local communities are endangered.

Funders need to consider more innovative and entrepreneurial approaches found in Indigenous projects that can cut across their grant portfolio such as education, conservation, youth, economic development, justice, health etc. I ask that grantmakers and NGO's that fund and assist Indigenous communities include Indigenous Peoples on their board to strengthen leadership and to make sure the interests of the community is first.

We as grantmakers, need to give Indigenous Peoples resources to allow them to become economically independent and provide long-lasting change.

Respectfully,

Rebecca Adamson

President and Founder of First Nations Development Institute (FNDI)
Founder of both International Funders for Indigenous Peoples (IFIP)
and First Peoples Worldwide (FPW).

International Funders for Indigenous Peoples (IFIP)

The International Funders for Indigenous Peoples (IFIP), a United States-based affinity group, grew out of First Nations Development Institute's 24 years of work promoting Native American self-determination and economic self-reliance. IFIP is an association of grantmakers that are interested in supporting Indigenous projects worldwide and is a forum within which funders exchange ideas and experiences, as well as interact with representatives of Indigenous communities in order to gain direct access to information relevant to their grantmaking activities.

IFIP was born from the needs voiced by grantmakers to more effectively manage their efforts to support Indigenous development. IFIP's goal is to foster greater foundation commitment and more effective grantmaking for Indigenous peoples by improving networking opportunities, enhancing collaboration, building capacity, and promoting linkages among new and experienced donors.

Indigenous-focused philanthropy has a unique set of issues that require understanding and adaptability. Grantmakers who work with Indigenous communities and organizations are faced with the challenges of language, cultural differences, geographic isolation, lack of infrastructure and technology. In their efforts to bring definition to key issues, such as environmental conservation, many grantmaking institutions lack clarity about how to fit Indigenous development into existing focus areas.

IFIP and its members work to:

- Increase knowledge and understanding of the unique issues related to funding projects that involve Indigenous peoples by providing a baseline of relevant information.
- Encourage innovation and increase effectiveness within the grantmaking community by facilitating networking opportunities and an ongoing exchange of ideas and practical tools.
- Foster a cross-disciplinary understanding of Indigenous peoples and the holistic contexts in which they live and work.

Through a variety of several workshops, a bi-annual newsletter called The Sharing Circle, research reports, its annual conference and regular communications, IFIP will continue to develop a unique network built around skills and knowledge relevant to Indigenous philanthropy.

First Peoples Worldwide (FPW)

Indigenous Peoples around the world share not only a common ethos, but also face similar challenges and struggles. By networking and sharing common experiences, Indigenous peoples can learn from each other to secure their future. Practicing culturally appropriate development for over 20 years, First Nations Development Institute, an Indigenous-led organization specializing in Native American economic development, has received numerous requests for financial and technical assistance from Indigenous groups in various parts of the world. These groups want to design and implement their own community-oriented development projects and programs. They are interested in how "First Nations made it work." First Nations Development Institute responded to these requests by creating an international department called First Peoples Worldwide.

First Peoples Worldwide's mission is to promote Indigenous determination and control of assets by strengthening Indigenous communities through sharing of knowledge of both needs and resources.

First Peoples Worldwide takes an active role in sustaining both the land and the culture of Indigenous peoples by:

- Facilitating and fostering the equitable participation of Indigenous peoples in the resolution of environmental, legal, and economic issues;
- Assisting with the financial and technical assistance and resources necessary to strengthen and facilitate Indigenous-controlled, culturally appropriate development projects, programs, and intermediaries;
- Advocating Indigenous self-governance; and
- Building an Indigenous network, information clearinghouse, and databank that includes information on Indigenous self-governance and Indigenous land rights.

Introduction

This Guide contains information on the elements of a proposal, how to conduct foundation research, useful research websites, glossary of fundraising terms, and information on over 250 philanthropic institutions, foundations, corporations, and government agencies who provide funding for Indigenous communities and other groups working in international development.

This Guide contains six primary sections:

- Elements of a Proposal, provides a brief description of a what a proposal contains and examples for each section.
- Researching Foundations, provides a step-by-step guide on how to conduct foundation research.
- Research Websites, provides information on various websites that can assist you in your fundraising endeavors.
- Glossary of Terms, provides definitions of key words found in proposal guidelines, elements of a proposal and other important terms.
- Foundation and Corporate Grantmakers Funding Indigenous People, contains funding organizations that directly fund Indigenous organizations and projects worldwide.
- International Foundation and Corporate Grantmakers, includes philanthropic institutions that fund in various countries and regions of the world.

Each funding institution listed includes:

- Contact information.
- Regions and specific countries of interest.
- Funding priorities.

Prior to approaching a funder with a proposal, do some research on the foundation's background and funding criteria. Find out as much as you can about the foundation, such as their philosophy and grantmaking procedures. In addition, it is a good idea to review their annual reports before approaching them with your proposal or letter of intent.

Elements of a Proposal

Several foundations supply guidelines regarding what they want you to include in the proposals submitted to them. If they provide guidelines, they expect that they will be followed. They will appreciate that you have taken the time to give them the information on your project in the format they request.

There are seven basic elements that most foundations expect to see in a proposal:

- Executive Summary – Clearly summarize your request (1 page).
- Statement of Need or Problem Statement – Clearly state the issue or condition, and the causes of the condition (1-2 pages).
- Project Description, Goal, and Objective(s) – States the benefits of the project in measurable terms (2-3 pages).
- Activities – Describes the activities to achieve the objectives (2-3 pages).
- Staffing and Evaluation Method – Describes how you will determine the success of your project in relation to the accomplishment of the goal (2 pages).
- Budget – Clearly shows the costs to be covered by the grant (1 page).
- Conclusion – (2 paragraphs).

Executive Summary

The first page of the proposal is the most important section. You should summarize all of the key information included in your proposal. Many times a fundraiser will write this section last. Nevertheless, it should be the first entry in a proposal. Be certain to include:

- The Issue – clearly and concisely state the issue or need your community has recognized and wants to change through your project (1 or 2 paragraphs).
- The Solution – concisely describe the project, including how, what, where and when the project will take place and how many people will benefit from the program. Also describe who will do the work, and how the project addresses the issue and where it will operate (1 or 2 paragraphs).
- The Funding Requirements – explain how much money will be needed for the project, resources already secured, and how you plan to fund the project in the future, if appropriate (1 paragraph).
- The Organization's Information – relate your organization's history, include information on your NGO status, when your organization began, and how the project fits with your organization's mission. Be sure to emphasize your organization's capacity to carry out this project and how this project fits with your other programs (1 paragraph).

Background Information to the Problem or Issue

This section of the proposal concisely states a situation that needs to be changed; it states who/what is affected; why it exists; it quantifies; and it addresses an issue related to the purpose of the project.

Start this section with a community profile.

Community Profile

This section of the proposal should include a summary of the community. It should include general information as well as specifics relevant to the type of project being proposed.

Types of relevant community information may include:

- Demographic information.
- Economic activities.
- Political structure.
- Social stratification.
- Organizations and their functions and activities.

Statement of Need

Develop a narrative that explains and builds the case for your project. Types of relevant information could include:

- Who is affected.
- Why the problem or issue exists.
- What caused the issue or problem.
- The extent of the problem.

You should attempt to document why no one else has successfully addressed this issue, and it should be accurate and persuasive. This section of the proposal is where you present the facts and evidence of an issue that your community or organization wants to change, and show that you understand the problem.

The background narrative should convince the foundation that your project is important and is something in which the foundation wants to be involved in. The explanation does not have to be long, but it should focus on the issue the project will address.

Things to avoid in the background information:

- Avoid emotional appeals.
- Avoid providing data that is not relevant to the project.
- Do not “paint a picture” that is hopeless.

Remember you do not raise money by “begging” for it. You raise it by telling your story and selling people on your organization and community.

Summarize

Summarize your background information at the end of the narrative by stating upfront what the issue is and if nothing is done, then these are the consequences.

The Project Description

This part of the proposal should address the solution. It should describe your project. The project description should include the following:

- The project goal.
- The objective(s).
- The activities.
- The required staffing.
- The evaluation methodology.

Project Summary

Start this section of the proposal with a brief project summary. Explain the project and how the project will create change as it relates to the issue identified in the background information. This doesn't have to be long and exhaustive but long enough to set the stage for the project goal and the objectives. Make sure you indicate the project outcomes and how they relate to the project goal.

For example:

The lack of water for cattle has created economic and social strife within our community. To address this situation, we propose to drill 10 boreholes within our territory to increase the water supply for our cattle. We will consult with our elders and community leaders on the appropriate locations for the boreholes and solicit assistance from the local agricultural extension program to provide expertise and equipment for the drilling. With the addition of 10 new boreholes our cattle will have sufficient water for grazing, resulting in a larger herd size. The successful completion of this project will create an increase in economic stability for the community, increase family stability, decrease dependency on food programs, and increase tribal members' self-esteem through a greater ability of self-sufficiency.

Project Goal and Objectives

Now state the goal boldly. It may be only one sentence or it can be longer. In either case make the goal direct and to the point.

For example:

To improve the economic and social condition of the Ilingwesi Group Ranch.

Objectives

In this section of the proposal, you can use bullets, indentations, or numbers to denote the objectives in the text.

For example:

Objectives of the project are as follows:

- To organize an advisory committee of 5 leaders in Ilingwesi Group Ranch, from January to March 2004.
- To drill 10-borehole on the Ilingwesi Group Ranch by September 2004.

Activities

The activities section describes what you will do to achieve the objectives. Start this section with a narrative and summarize the planned activities. Answer the questions of how, when, why, and who will carry out the planned activities of the project.

For example:

In January 2004 the Project Coordinator will meet individually with community leaders and request a convening to discuss the development and implementation of 10 additional boreholes within our territory. Meetings will be held in January and February. At the meetings leaders will utilize their traditional knowledge through discussion and selection of the appropriate locations to drill the additional 10 boreholes as well as determine the appropriate grazing patterns to incorporate the new water supply locations.

Once the locations of the boreholes have been determined, the Project Coordinator will confer with the local agriculture extension agency and schedule the drilling of the boreholes. The agriculture extension agency has volunteered their time, expertise, and equipment to assist in the drilling of the boreholes.

Drilling of the boreholes is planned to begin by the end of March in order to capture the spring rains. By the end of September 2004, we will have drilled 10 additional boreholes within our territory providing additional water supply for our cattle. This will allow a larger herd size resulting in an increase in the economic and social stability of our community.

Staffing

In a narrative format, briefly summarize the staff and volunteer's areas of experience and expertise, and their responsibilities. In addition, you will want to indicate whether they will be working full or part-time on the project.

For example:

Jose Ole Karea will be the full-time Project Coordinator. He has 6 years experience in organizing community groups within the Massai tribe to address community concerns and issues. In addition, Karea, a member of the Ilingwesi Group Ranch, is well known and respected within the community. He will be responsible for the implementation of the project, coordinating and conducting the advisory committee meetings, coordinating the borehole drilling operation, and monitoring and reporting on the project progress.

The agricultural extension agency has worked in the Ilingwesi Group Ranch previously on various pastoral projects and brings a wealth of expertise to the project. They will be responsible for the drilling of the boreholes utilizing environmental sound management techniques. Their staff and equipment will be engaged in the project from March through September 2004.

Remember foundations are reviewing your proposal not only on the content of the project but also on the capacity to carry out a successful project. Choosing the right personnel, whether they are volunteers, paid staff, or consultants, is vitally important.

Evaluation

It is essential that you describe how you intend to evaluate the project. The evaluation process contains two sections:

- Monitoring the planned activities.
- Gathering and analyzing information to determine whether the project is achieving its goal.

For example:

The Project Coordinator will continually monitor the project activities to ensure that the project proceeds as scheduled. Progress of the project will be reported to the community and the funding agency as required.

It is anticipated that through the project implementation, short-term and long-term outcomes will take place. The following outcomes will be accomplished:

- Increased community stability.
- Increased income.
- Decreased dependency on food delivery programs.
- Increased self-esteem.

To determine the success of the project in meeting the stated goal, information will be gathered on both the short and long-term community impacts. The short-term community impact will include an increase in self-esteem of the community members. Information will be gathered on the number of community members involved in the borehole drilling activity and the increased number of cattle having access to the additional water supply.

Long-term outcomes will happen within the next year. We will continue to evaluate the project and gather information in the following areas:

- The number of individuals moving out of the community after the implementation of the new boreholes.
- The number of individuals not using outside resources for their food supply.
- The number of cattle being sold to urban centers.

The successful completion of the project will result in an improved economic and social condition of the IIngwesi Group Ranch.

Budget

The introduction of the budget section should be brief but indicate any additional resources outside of the requested funding. Make sure that you have incorporated all project costs including in-kind donations, cash contributions, and other grant awards for this specific project. You may be required to submit a budget narrative or a budget justification. This is a good tool to use if there are any unusual expenses in the project.

Conclusion

Each proposal must have one or two conclusion paragraphs. This is a good place to bring attention to what will happen after the completion of the project. If appropriate, you can list future activities. This will prepare the foundation for your next funding request. It is important that you relate that the project will continue whether or not you receive subsequent funding.

Also summarize the proposal's main points. Briefly state what the organization wants to accomplish and why it is important. Emphasize why your organization needs the funding to reach the stated project goal. Do not be afraid, in this section, to be emotional to reaffirm your case.

Researching Foundations

For most nonprofit organizations and NGOs, fundraising seems to be a daunting task. It does not have to be if you follow the process of identifying foundations and corporations that have the same program interests. Foundations encourage grantseekers to pay close attention to the research process. This is the homework section of successful fundraising.

Successful fundraising is a focused, deliberate effort that becomes more successful over time. There is no quick fix to this process. There are three major research steps to follow:

- Step 1. Compile
- Step 2. Investigate
- Step 3. Refine

Step 1 - Compile

The first step is to compile a comprehensive list of foundations, corporations, and other funders whose interests are the same as your organization. During this research stage, include all the funders that you think should be on the list. The funders that do not have interest in your programs will be eliminated in later research steps.

Start with local funders in your own community. You should look to the grantmakers already funding in your community before investigating foundations that fund nationally or internationally. You have a variety of resources to draw from, including funders of other NGOs doing similar work and local embassies and consulates.

Check local NGO annual reports, if available, to see who is funding their programs. Research international businesses in your country that may be interested in your project. In addition, check with international embassies and consulates to see if there are any international programs in your country that would apply to your community issues.

Other sources of foundation information require either the Internet or a trip to the library. There are a variety of resources. In the United States, the best source of online research for grantseekers is the Foundation Center (www.fconline.org). For international research, check out www.proposalwriter.com/intgrants.html and Grantmakers Without Borders at www.gwob.net/

According to the Global Equity Initiative at the Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University, there are over 45 regional and country philanthropic support groups. These groups provide a wealth of information on directories of funders and are a source of information for grantmakers in their countries. They are not grantmakers themselves nor are they a direct route for a grant proposal to get to a funder. A sampling of the organizations include:

- Asia Pacific Philanthropy Consortium www.asianphilanthropy.org.
- Center for Philanthropy and Civil Society (Thailand) <http://cpcs.nida.ac.th/>
- Centre for Advancement of Philanthropy (India) www.cozucare.org/cap/index.htm

- Grupo de Fundaciones (Argentina) www.gdf.org.ar.
- Centro Mexicano para la Filantropia (CEMEFI) www.cemefi.org.
- Puerto Rico Community Foundation www.fcpr.org.
- Grupo de Institutos Fundacoes e Empresas (GIFE) (Brazil) www.gife.org.br.
- Centro Colombiano de Responsabilidad (Colombia). www.ccre.org.co/default.asp
- Institute for Development of Social Investment (Brazil). www.idis.org.br
- South Africa Grantmakers Association. www.donors.org.za/members.html

As you identify potential funders create a prospect worksheet for each funder. The following chart is a sample prospect worksheet.

Step 2 - Investigate

The next step is to carefully study the foundations you have listed. The first place to look for information about a foundation is with the foundation itself. This is the best up-to-date source of information. Annual reports and printed guidelines are most helpful and are available by contacting the foundation directly. Simply request a copy of their annual report as well as the proposal guidelines, if available.

In addition, many academic and public libraries have information on foundations. Many countries may also have an agency at the state or provincial level that can assist you in your research endeavors. You may also visit the U.S. Information Service located in the U.S. Embassy, the British Council, or the European Union Representative and other international embassies and consulates.

Here is what you are looking for in your research:

- Track records of giving in your geographic locale, in your program area, or for the type of support you seek.
- Grants of a size compatible with your organization's needs.
- Funders that have not already committed their resources many years into the future.

(The Foundation Center's Guide to Proposal Writing. Third Edition)

- The Internet – Grantseekers are discovering a wealth of information on the Internet. We have listed a few of the website directories in the next section of this booklet. Today more and more foundations and corporate giving programs have a presence on the Internet.
- Annual Reports – Foundation annual reports are an excellent source of information. These reports provide information on current giving patterns and information for projecting trends. The annual report also reflects the personality, style, and interests of the foundation. Look for clues that reveal the underlying philosophy of the foundation. Examine the list of grantees and look for clues for specific areas of interest.
- Guidelines – The proposal guidelines contain additional information regarding where the foundation funds, as well as deadlines for submitting a proposal. Printed guidelines can tell you quickly whether or not a foundation could fund your project.

Step 3 - Refine

According to the Foundation Center, with the information in hand about each of the prospective funders, it is now time to eliminate those prospects that do not meet your interests. Focus on resources most likely to fund your projects now or in the future. As you begin your fundraising journey, make notes on when you submit each document or have contact with foundation personnel. In addition, make notes of the conversation and always provide the information requested on time. When contacting a foundation use your common sense and determine if you want to continue exploring this particular funder. Remember every foundation has its own unique personality, therefore making foundation research a critical step in your fundraising process.

Research Web Sites

Proposal writing tips and other information

Fundraising Ideas that Work for Grassroots Groups.

This publication by Ken Wyman provides advice on fundraising for grassroots groups. It includes sections on the fundraising climate in Canada, the four types of fundraising, working with volunteers, and more.
Website: <http://www.pch.gc.ca/progs/pc-cp/pubs/e/Fr4gras1.htm>

Grantmakers Without Borders (GWOB)

Grantmakers Without Borders (GWOB) is not a grantmaking organization. On their website they provide helpful resource information for grantseekers, as well as links to sites that provide proposal-writing tips.
Website: www.gwob.net

Charity Village Library

There are several articles relating to grantseeking found in the Charity Village Library that are worth reading, including: 1) Top ten ways to get your proposal read. 2) Foundation collaboration-visioning for the future. 3) Grantmakers get more focused. 4) Proposals that appeal or appall. Understanding the funder and the proposal.

Aid to Artisans (ATA) makes approximately 50 modest grants each year to craft-based associations worldwide. Typically, these grants range from U.S. $500 to $1,500 and are used to help these groups purchase much needed equipment and materials to improve or increase their craft production. Craft groups that are already established with Aid to Artisans through previous grants or through ATA project participation may apply for a Marketing Support Grant. This new grant category is in the same financial range. This may cover trade show costs, product development, or production assistance.

Only grant requests accompanied by a letter of recommendation from organizations already known to Aid to Artisans or part of the ATA network will be considered. Some examples of groups known to ATA include the International Federation for Alternative Trade, Oxford Committee for Famine Relief, U.N. agencies, Fair Trade Foundation, U.S. Peace Corps Volunteers and other international aid organizations.

Amazon Conservation Team's (ACT) activities are based on the concept that by helping the rainforest peoples manage and protect their cultures the forest ecosystems that surround and sustain them also can be managed and protected. ACT believes that the fates of Indigenous peoples and of the rainforests on which they depend are profoundly intertwined.

The projects of ACT are designed to address some of the major threats faced by indigenous cultures: the loss of medicinal and botanical wisdom, lack of health care, lack of economic opportunity, the lack of territorial rights that would protect the rainforest from exploitation, and the lack of legal representation.

Web: <http://www.christensenfund.org>

The Christensen Fund (TCF) focus's its bio-cultural grantmaking in the following geographical regions:

- The Colorado and Tarahumara Plateaus and the Sonora Desert of the American Southwest and Northern Mexico.
- The chain of mountains and associated valleys from Central Turkey-Iran-Central Asia-Xinjiang.
- The African Rift Valley, priority Ethiopia.
- New Guinea, adjacent islands within Melanesia, Aboriginal Northern Australia, and the Torres Strait Islands.

Grants focus on the interface between natural environments and human cultures, primarily working with “Indigenous,” “tribal” and “minority” peoples and communities, and the landscapes with which their cultures, histories, and artistic expression are so connected. The objective is to help elucidate the relationships between culture and environment and to strengthen the world’s capacity to maintain cultural and biological diversity.

Building Global Knowledge and Public Education: TCF emphasizes the building and sharing of knowledge in areas of interest across these regions and other places worldwide; the deploying of Indigenous and tribal knowledge in public education through film, multi-media, and other efforts among young people across the world; and working locally with institutions to bring understanding of these issues and perspectives to the multi-cultural community of the Bay Area.

Program interests include the four geographic regions, film, multi-media, art, culture, Indigenous knowledge, multi-cultural education, traditional environmental management, and use.

Inquiry and Proposal Submission: TCF strongly encourages initial contact to take the form of completing and submitting their on-line inquiry form.

The Ecologic Development Fund (EDF) was established in 1992 with the objective to conserve endangered wildlife and wild lands by advancing community-based development and resource management. It funds projects that ensure the sound stewardship of biologically rich tropical forests, train farmers in sustainable agriculture, and strengthen community groups so that they can better protect their threatened natural resources. In many of their project partnerships are with Indigenous organizations and communities.

EcoLogic's assistance ranges from helping communities to declare areas protected in order to thwart cattle ranchers and developers, strategic planning to finance reserves and protected areas, providing training in park management, and sponsoring workshops for community leaders on forest co-management. In 1999, EcoLogic Development Fund launched a “green” loan fund that offers fair credit to support environmental enterprise development. Their geographical areas of funding are Mexico and Central America.

The general aim of the EuropeAid Co-operation Office is to promote the conservation and sustainable management of tropical forests and other forests in developing countries worldwide, so as to meet the economic, social, and environmental demands placed on forests at local, national, and global levels.

Activities under this program aim at:

- Raising the status of forests in national policies and integrating forest policies based on sustainable forest management in development planning.
- Promoting the production and use of wood and non-wood forest products from sustainably managed resources.
- Contributing to the adequate valuation of forest resources and services.
- Ensuring active participation of forest-dependent people and local communities in the development of national forest policies and in development planning.
- Improving coordination and the flow of information between Commission and Member State projects to put in place coherent actions in that area.

International Development Exchange (IDEX) does not accept unsolicited proposals for partnership and we only bring in new partners a few at a time, every 2-3 years.

IDEX limits partnerships, and therefore funding to social change organizations in the following countries: Bangladesh, Guatemala, India, southern Mexico,

Nicaragua, Philippines, and Zimbabwe. In 2004-2005, we expect to include partnerships in Nepal and South Africa.

The foundation partnership work focuses on economic empowerment of disadvantaged communities at the grassroots. Participating organizations must have this focus as a central part of their mission and program.

When IDEX identifies the need for new partners, they seek out social change organizations that are working in areas with greatest economic need in the countries where IDEX is already working. The selection criteria include, but are not limited to:

- Compatibility of mission and purpose
- A focus on economic initiatives
- Participatory and democratic processes for community decision-making
- The inclusion of women in the management structure.

These criteria were developed in consultation with longstanding NGO associates in each of the partner regions. IDEX selected the initial four partners in each region that most closely matched these criteria. Thereafter, regional partners, in cooperation with IDEX, select additional partners for that region.

Organizations interested in potential future partnerships should contact the Program Director for their geographic region for further information.

The Netherlands Centre for Indigenous Peoples (NCIV) provides grants for the Rights of Indigenous Peoples that focus on the United Nations Draft Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. The following are the funds available:

Grants for Rights of Indigenous Peoples, which address one or more of the following rights: Right to peace; Right to culture; Right to consultation; Land and resource rights; Intellectual property rights; Indigenous women's rights; and Protection of Indigenous knowledge.

Human Rights Fund for Indigenous Peoples' main objective is to enable the participation of representatives of Indigenous people to attend relevant United Nations human rights functions, such as the Working Group on Indigenous People established in accordance with Commission on Human Rights resolution 1995/32 and the Commission on Human Rights. This fund was established in 1984 and is now administered together with Anti Slavery International (England), the Gesellschaft fur Bedrohte Volker (Germany), the International Work Group for Indigenous Affairs (Denmark), and KWIA (the Belgian Indigenous support group).

Visitors Fund, financed by Dutch Committee of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature, is to enable NGO representatives who are already visiting in Europe to also visit the Netherlands if this is relevant to their situation. Since 1998 NCIV administers this fund in cooperation with Environmental Data Service, the European environmental news source, and Friends of the Earth.

E-mail: rainforest@ran.org
Web: www.ran.org

The Rainforest Action Network (RAN) works to protect the Earth's rainforests and support the rights of their inhabitants through education, grassroots organising, and non-violent direct action. RAN works in alliance with environmental and human rights groups around the world, including Indigenous forest communities and non-governmental organisations in rainforest countries. From its beginnings, RAN has played a key role in strengthening the worldwide rainforest conservation movement by supporting activists in tropical countries, as well as by organising and mobilising consumers and community action groups throughout the United States.

RAN's Protect-an-Acre Program (PAA) provides grants directly to organisations and communities in rainforest regions. PAA prioritises projects that help forest peoples gain control of their traditional territories through land demarcation, the development of locally based alternative economic initiatives, community organisation, and resistance to destructive practices such as logging and fossil fuel development.

The Rainforest Alliance is a non-profit organisation dedicated to the conservation of tropical forests worldwide. It runs the Catalyst Grant Program, which is awarded to carefully selected conservation projects where the infusion of a modest amount of money can dramatically increase the effectiveness of a specific endeavour. In 1995, the Program added a special emphasis on supporting women's conservation projects. Priority is given to groups that are out of the funding loop from international or local sources because of their size or geographic location. Catalyst grants are also given in response to emergency needs.

Rainforest Concern was established to protect the world's tropical rainforests and the incredible biodiversity they contain, together with the Indigenous people who still depend on them for their survival. They have projects throughout the world, including Ecuador, Costa Rica, Panama, Chile, Sri Lanka, and Brazil, as well as a project they are assisting in Zambia. They provide small grants to purchase, lease and manage threatened native forest with exceptional biodiversity; develop programs for health, education, and alternative income generation with local people living near their projects; aim to form partnerships and undertake biodiversity research. They are interested in biodiversity and conservation; Indigenous peoples; forest issues; health and education; and land rights.

The Rainforest Conservation Fund (RCF) is an all-volunteer non-profit organisation that is dedicated to preserve the world's tropical rainforests. RCF funds small projects related to rainforests - that is, in or near rainforests. They are, therefore, amenable to projects elsewhere if they are pertinent to rainforest conservation. Thus far, they have funded projects in Peru and Costa Rica. RCF supports projects aimed at fauna management, community management of lakes, habitat protection and recuperation, agroforestry, successful species, enriched fallows, and maintain local/community possession. The goal is to avoid cutting primary forest and to restore secondary forest and degraded areas.

Rettet den Regenwald e.V. is an individual donor-based and action campaign-focused organization. The Indigenous peoples themselves or their partners would have to create an interest in the organization for their cause. Once interested, the organization will then launch a major fundraising campaign to obtain funds from individuals throughout Germany, Europe, and beyond. The foundation also focuses on human rights campaigns by writing the Foreign Minister of Germany and the heads of states of countries with rainforests to support their causes. They have funding in regions worldwide with major rainforests.

The “Small Grants Programme for Operations to Promote Tropical Forests” (SGP PTF) is a European Commission funded initiative implemented by the UNDP and executed by the SEAMEO Regional Centre for Graduate Study and Research in Agriculture (SEARCA). The foundation funds 9 countries in South and Southeast Asia. The SGP PTF is a community focused, country led program that works closely with and builds on the existing mechanisms and procedures established by The GEF Small Grants Programme. In several of the SGP-PTF country programs Indigenous people and Indigenous people led initiatives form the focus of the foundation funding. The main objective of this programme is to encourage and support local communities, who often have little access to financial and technical resources to undertake innovative approaches to sustainable forest management at the local level.

Web: www.gtz.de/toeb

The Tropical Ecology Support (TOEB) is an organisation, which aims to contribute to the ecological sustainability of development projects of the German government. TOEB finances ecological research projects that fall in line with the aims of the GTZ (German Technical Co-operation). It has three program components to co-ordinate (two of which - tropical ecology and tropical forestry - form a single unit and small-scale environment projects).

In Tropical Ecology Research, emphasis is placed on: Local resource management (including issues relating to conflict management, land ownership, and land-use rights; economic exploitation of biodiversity (including sustainable tourism and wildlife management); ecological agriculture and agro-biodiversity; utilisation of Indigenous knowledge; and the use of bio-indicators for monitoring purposes.

Key areas suitable under the tropical forestry component include: instruments and concepts for the rehabilitation and sustainable management of secondary forests and plantations as an alternative to the utilisation of primary forests; the tapping, use, and marketing of timber and non-timber resources (e.g. bio-prospecting, tourism, CO2 binding); political, legal, institutional, and social frame-work conditions for forest conservation; dynamic of ecological processes in cases of human intervention in tropical forest systems. They work in Asia, Africa, and Latin America.

The Tropical Rainforest Coalition (TRC) is an all-volunteer, non-profit organisation that concentrates on the preservation of rainforests and Indigenous peoples. It builds coalitions between individuals, corporations, businesses, learning institutions, and NGOs that are working to reverse the unsustainable use of rainforests. Funds are small and priority is given to the preservation and conservation of tropical rainforest ecosystems and the Indigenous peoples who live in those systems. Other priorities include funding and managing land purchase efforts (Save-an-Acre Program), developing low-impact eco-tourism programs with Indigenous participation, promoting environmental awareness and education, and the Tropical Bird Rescue program.

They primarily work in Latin America with a focus on Ecuador, Belize, and Peru.

Proposals must directly benefit Indigenous peoples in a culturally appropriate, sustainable, and gender-inclusive manner and address issues central to Indigenous peoples' aspirations. Examples of the type of projects supported by the Grants Facility are innovative pilot projects that build on Indigenous culture, identity, knowledge, natural resources, intellectual property and human rights, and/or institutions.

The Grants Facility for Indigenous Peoples will consider grants addressing the following areas:

- Planning and preparation of development projects implemented by Indigenous Peoples' communities and organizations.
- Increasing Indigenous peoples communities' and organizations' capacity for self-development.
- Development of partnerships and alliances with other stakeholders, such as governments and international organizations, or between Indigenous peoples' organizations.
- Innovative pilot projects that build on Indigenous culture, identity, knowledge, natural resources, intellectual property and human rights, and/or institutions.
- Recommendations made by the UN Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues on social and economic development areas.

The ADC Foundation is the charitable arm of ADC Telecommunications. During fiscal year 2003 and more fully in 2004 and beyond, the ADC Foundation will narrow its direct grantmaking to two strategic focus areas: mathematics and science education, and nonprofit access to technology. Although the foundation will continue to match ADC employee gifts to a wide spectrum of types of nonprofits and causes, the foundation will consider grant requests only in the following two areas:

- Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics (STEM) Education - Grants to organizations whose primary mission impacts K-12 or higher education, for projects where the aim is systemic improvements in the teaching or learning of mathematics and science or enhancements to the "pipeline" for the preparation of students for work in technology-oriented industry.
- Access to Technology - Grants to organizations where the proposed project serves to close the "Digital Divide" by providing the nonprofit sector with competitive computing or telecommunications technologies, with the end goal of using technology tools to improve service delivery and enhance sector capacity.

The foundation is currently working internationally in Mexico, Canada, UK, Ireland and Australia.

The Baxter International Foundation, established in 1981, began to focus exclusively on increasing access to health care in 2002-particularly for the disadvantaged and underserved- in communities where Baxter employees live and work. Funds agencies in developing countries to increase their staff, such as nurses and nurse practitioners that can provide basic health care services. In addition, they support the hiring of community-based nurses, who work closely with communities to identify needs, offer health education and disease prevention services, and provide care. They are interested in challenge grants, training, merge of resources, and the creation of new volunteer based programs.

The Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) provides funding in Africa & Middle East, Americas, Asia, and Central and Eastern Europe. The list of countries eligible for Canadian ODA is based on the one established by the Development Assistance Committee (DAC) of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD). ODA program concentrates resources on the following six priorities: Basic human needs; Gender Equality; Infrastructure services; Human rights; Environment; and Private sector.

In addition, a new vision for Africa, developed by a group of progressive African leaders—the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD)—lays out a roadmap from marginalization to the mainstream of economic development in the 21st Century. Canada has taken a leading role in supporting that vision with the $500-million Canada Fund for Africa. Fund initiatives include governance, peace & security; social priorities & the environment; trade & investment; and bridging the digital divide.

The Citigroup Foundation provides grants for financial education programs which lead to the development of assets that can help increase family stability, encourage better consumer habits, and eventually increase an individual's stake in his/her community, and financial education to young people.

The foundation also seeks to improve educational opportunities in low-income communities by providing grants to support early childhood through secondary education literacy development, technology-based curriculum resources, and career and college preparation programs; teacher training and innovative teaching strategies that increase student achievement; integrating the arts into school curricula programs and increasing student access to leading cultural institutions; higher education to improve student and curriculum development for graduate and undergraduate business programs; and organizations seeking to increase access for minorities and women to higher education and the workplace opportunities.

In low-income neighborhoods in Citigroup communities worldwide, the foundation seeks to support community development corporations, intermediary organizations and community development financial institutions that focus on affordable housing, economic development, welfare-to-work initiatives, community infrastructure improvements, and environmentally sustainable growth to local economies.

Grants are also made to support community-based health and human services programs and disaster relief efforts.

The Liz Claiborne and Art Ortenberg Foundation is a private body devoted to the conservation of nature and the amelioration of human distress. The foundation seeks to redress the breakdown in the processes linking nature and humanity. It concerns itself particularly with matters of species extinction, habitat destruction and fragmentation, resource depletion and resource waste. It favors solutions that directly benefit local communities and serve as exemplars for saving species and wild lands. It recognizes the imperative to reconcile nature preservation with human needs and aspirations.

The foundation devotes a substantial portion of its funding to developing countries. It therefore recognizes the destructive connection between poverty, over-population, high infant mortality, cultural traditions that dehumanize women, inequitable land distribution and the subsequent degradation of the land and the systems the land supports.

The Engineering Information Foundation's grant activity supports developmental projects, instructional projects, and training programs in engineering education and research that fit their fields of interest. These currently include the availability and use of published information, women in engineering, and information access in developing countries

The technology gap between the developed and developing worlds is getting larger every day. The need for access to engineering resources as well as the skills to use the information effectively is of increasing importance as countries move along in their technological development.

The Engineering Information Foundation's goal is to support and strengthen educational and service center programs that help students and teachers find and use the engineering information they need, from computer and Internet sources or by other means. Your project might focus on instruction in engineering schools and libraries, support for acquisition of information systems, or support for Internet connectivity in the developing world.

Catherine Bryant, Program Officer
E-mail: cbryant@izumi.org
Web: www.izumi.org

The primary goal of the Izumi Foundation is to support efforts that will reduce the burden of infectious diseases in developing and low-income countries. The foundation's geographic focus includes the following countries in Sub-Saharan Africa: Botswana, Ghana, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Mali, Mozambique, Namibia, Nigeria, South Africa, Swaziland, Tanzania, Uganda, and Zambia. The foundation also funds in these countries in Central and South America: Bolivia, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Guyana, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua, Paraguay, and Peru.

Although the foundation places a funding priority on the six infectious diseases - pneumonia, tuberculosis, diarrhoeal disease, malaria, HIV/AIDS, and measles - that cause the highest rates of mortality, morbidity, and disability, the foundation is also aware of the severity and scope of other, less prevalent infectious diseases, particularly blinding trachoma and onchocerciasis. The foundation also understands the critical importance of health care delivery systems. The majority of the foundation's grantmaking will be done through initiatives that will focus on: strengthening local health care delivery systems; cost-effective strategies for prevention; storage, transportation and distribution of donated vaccines and pharmaceuticals; and disease interventions that encourage the most effective use of limited, local health care resources.

The goal of Charles Stewart Mott Foundation's grantmaking in South Africa is to support a vibrant, diverse and inclusive civil society in which nonprofit organizations work to deepen democracy, increase participation in decision making, advance socioeconomic and racial equality, and promote justice and reconciliation.

They seek to accomplish this goal through three objectives: Nonprofit Sector and Philanthropy; Rights, Responsibilities and Participation; Race and Ethnic Relations; and Cross-Cutting Themes

In addition, the foundation is committed to ensuring the inclusion of all people in building civil society in South Africa. In all three objectives, the foundation supports efforts to build women's leadership and management skills, and to encourage women's participation in governance, democracy-building, and policy development, especially at the local level.

The goal of the foundation's grantmaking in Central/Eastern Europe (CEE) and Russia is to foster societies in which people and communities respect each other's rights and engage effectively in decision making to influence policies and processes that shape their lives at the local, national, and/or international levels.

The Open Society Institute (OSI) is a private operating and grantmaking foundation based in New York City that serves as the hub of the Soros foundations network, a group of autonomous foundations and organizations in more than 50 countries. OSI and the network implement a range of initiatives that aim to promote open societies by shaping government policy and supporting education, media, public health, and human and women's rights, as well as social, legal, and economic reform.

OSI was founded in 1983 by investor and philanthropist George Soros to support his foundations in Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. Those foundations were established, starting in 1984, to help former communist countries in their transition to democracy. The Soros foundations network has expanded its geographic reach to include foundations and initiatives in Africa, Latin America and the Caribbean, Mongolia, Southeast Asia, Turkey, and the United States. OSI also supports selective projects in other parts of the world. Soros foundations are autonomous institutions established in particular countries or regions to initiate and support open society activities. The priorities and specific activities of each Soros foundation are determined by a local board of directors and staff in consultation with George Soros and OSI boards and advisors.

The foundation network consists of national foundations in 29 countries, foundations in Kosovo and Montenegro, and two regional foundations, the Open Society Initiative for Southern Africa (OSISA) and the Open Society Initiative for West Africa (OSIWA). OSISA and OSIWA, which are governed by their own boards of directors and staffs from the region, make grants in a total of 27 African countries.

Oxfam's work is currently prioritised according to five strategic change objectives relating to (1) sustainable livelihoods, (2) health and education, (3) life and security, (4) the right to be heard, and (5) gender equity. Oxfam GB's programmes are mostly implemented by local partner organisations in developing countries. Oxfam GB deals with all funding related matters through its international field offices.

Besides financing development projects in developing countries, Oxfam GB, together with the Oxfam International family, are involved in campaigning and lobbying activities, such as the current Trade Campaign. Many of the projects Oxfam funds explicitly support sustainable natural resources management.

Also, potential environmental impacts of a proposed project are considered before funding is approved. In Bangladesh, the Philippines, and Vietnam, Oxfam is especially involved in the conservation of mangrove forests. Oxfam is working with local people to rebuild this resource.

Oxfam International is a confederation of 12 organizations working together in more than 100 countries worldwide to find lasting solutions to poverty, suffering, and injustice.

TREE AID has a vision to see thriving, self-reliant communities in Africa's drylands. It is working towards this by reversing poverty and environmental degradation for some of the most threatened people on earth, through skills transfer and community forest and income generation projects. TREE AID funds work in the world's poorest regions: Burkina Faso, Ethiopia, Northern Ghana, Mali and Niger. TREE AID does not implement its own projects. Rather it funds local organisations that are already working with village communities they know. However, TREE AID does provide training to strengthen the technical and management capacity of partner organisations, so that they can run their own projects long after funding has ended. It also uses local expertise to follow up on projects it funds to learn and improve TREE AID's work on the ground. The kind of activities funded include: establishing tree seedling nurseries; growing trees on and around farms and homesteads; developing income generation activities, (such as honey production from acacia trees, sale of fruit...); improving farming methods and soil fertility so people can grow more food.

Trees for the Future is a nonprofit organisation with a people-to-people, action program that promotes and supports tree planting and environmentally sustainable self-help projects, in co-operation with local people in their own (sub-tropical) communities around the world. Their mission is to reverse forest decline (moist, cloud, rain, dry, etc.), to improve the quality of life for those who are dependent upon the land and forests, and to ensure healthy forests for future generations, by assisting local people to employ sustainable land management practices through the means of in-kind donations of tree seeds, hand tools and planting materials, as well as on-site technical training and planning assistance. Other issues they give emphasis to include: reforestation, afforestation, biological diversity, desertification and the restoration of degraded lands. They work in Belize, Bolivia, El Salvador, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Cameroon, Ethiopia, Gambia, Ghana, Kenya, Senegal, Tanzania, Togo, Uganda, India, and Philippines.

Since 1992, the SGP has promoted grassroots action to address global environmental concerns relating to biodiversity, climate change and international waters (as well as land degradation and persistent organic pollutants). SGP allocates grants of up to $50,000 - with an average grant size of between US$10-20,000 - directly to non-governmental organization, (NGOs), community-based organizations (CBOs), and indigenous peoples' organizations to support their efforts to protect the environment while generating sustainable livelihoods.

The programme currently operates through a decentralized management system in 73 countries in Africa, Arab States, Asia and the Pacific, CIS, Latin America and the Caribbean. Specific criteria established by a global strategic framework guide the approval of grants at the national level enabling SGP to be demand rather than supply driven. Country level activities are guided by National Steering Committees (NSCs) made up of a non-governmental majority of representatives from national NGOs, academia, co-funding donors, UN agencies, the private sector, as well as indigenous peoples' representatives.

In order to facilitate the process of grant applications for local NGOs, CBOs, and indigenous peoples, country programmes often organize workshops and 'write-shops' to help communities draft grant proposals to address their needs whilst meeting SGP criteria. For final project approval, NSCs consider whether proposals received are feasible, meet SGP criteria, and identify areas of additional support for potential grantees.

The UN Foundation is focusing on four of the most pressing challenges facing the world in the 21st century-- children's health, the environment, peace, security & human rights and women and population.

The challenges associated with these issues are urgent, difficult, and long-standing. Neither governments nor the private sector can grapple with them alone. Acting as a catalyst for change, the Foundation is working with the United Nations to mobilize the global community--individuals, corporations, governments, and nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) to take successful, concerted action in these areas.

The Weeden Foundation has prioritised the protection of biodiversity. Organisations supported to date range from those that protect ecosystems and wildlife to those that raise the status of women and increase awareness about family planning. The Foundation tends to provide large funds to projects, which serve as catalysts and focus on native forest conservation aimed at promoting greater efficiency in the use of wood products and developing substitutes to wood fibre. Additionally, the Foundation is interested in supporting effective consumer-based and consumer-targeted education and empowerment programs, especially those that use unique and effective delivery systems and outreach methods.

The Weeden Foundation will consider funding in any geographical location worldwide, but the Trustees have chosen the western U.S., Chile, Bolivia, and Central Siberia as high priority. Applicants should review the descriptions of past grantees posted on their website to better clarify the types of programs and organisations the foundation typically funds. Funding outside of priority areas is rare.
